Karine Moe & Dianna Shandy

Women and the American family

Drawing on hundreds of interviews from around the country, original survey research, and national labor force data, Moe and Shandy take an objective look at the so-called mommy wars. Glass Ceilings and 100-Hour Couples examines the many pressures that influence a woman's decision to resign, reproduce, or reorient her career. From women who continue to juggle paid work and family, to the professionalization of stay-at-home motherhood, Moe and Shandy offer a glimpse into what women's aspirations and struggles tell us about American families today.
